

Welcome to UltraMarine

Greetings to you,
UltraMarine reader!

Wow, as ever this issue has been an adventure! It ended up being something of a "race for the line" for me, with some major developments happening at the eleventh hour (one of which has been the application of some new print profiles which should brighten and lighten the mag a little... hopefully!). Thankfully, I managed to squeeze everything in but I'll be enjoying a week or two of R&R before gearing up for the next issue for sure!

In this instalment, we have Mike Paletta and Campbell Robertson both delivering particularly pertinent pieces to help you through some testing times for the hobby. I can't think of anyone better than these guys to be giving us some quality advice to act as an antidote to the sometimes shallow snippets coming out of the social media sphere. Also, check out Chris Sergeant's clawtastic crab-fest which has both looks and detail in spades. I can't hold a candle to these guys, but I hope you enjoy the odd word and image I've thrown in myself this issue.

Stick with us folks as we forge forth in stormy weather. I've said it before, but if anyone out there wants to get onboard and help us keep moving forward, drop me that email!

John

10 Reef Icons - No. 22

When it comes to colourful, interesting and reasonably reef-friendly fishes, the wrasses of the Halichoeres genus take some beating. For that reason, John Clipperton presents not just one, but a varied selection of some truly splendid species.

18 Close Look: Shop Review

Looking for a local reef retailer that you can really rely on? John Clipperton continues his visits to top marine stores around the UK, this time with a visit to Radical Aquatics in Leeds. But are they worthy of the UltraMarine "seal of approval"?

26 Turbulent Times

Events That Changed Reefing - Award-winning US veteran hobbyist Mike Paletta pinpoints the landmark events that shaped the hobby we know today, and studies the sometimes seismic sea-changes that rocked reef-keeping forever.

36 Beat the Blackout!

As ill-winds blow, and we prepare for a potentially challenging Winter, Campbell Robertson hopes for the best, but plans for the worst, and takes us through a range of proactive strategies to defeat those dreaded power-cuts.

46 True or False? A Crab Conundrum

Chris Sergeant nips your preconceptions in the bud (ouch!) with this commentary on some decidedly deceptive decapods and explains just what it is that makes a crab the "real deal"... or maybe something more mysterious.

64 Close up on Corals - Acropora [Pt 3]

John Clipperton picks-up from Part 2 back in issue 93, and concludes his series looking at this truly iconic coral genus. This time it's the problems, pests and propagation that are our areas for investigation.
